2. Introduction

A well-designed project orientation clarifies and describes what the project should deliver and within what time-frames. The project orientation is an important learning exercise that defines and schedules the major phases of project work being carried out to fulfil the desired project objective(s) and achieve the expected deliverables.

Project orientation is more than just planning and managing projects using technical skills. It is also about leading, engaging, and empowering teams and stakeholders toward outcomes, that deliver value to the organization. Project orientation defines the problem we are trying to solve or the goal we wish to achieve. It includes the purpose, focus and the objectives of the exercise.

Teams are more productive when onboarded with a clarity of the bigger picture so that they endorse the solution, making a difference through their contributions. This shall also give direction and meaning to the work and help to foster growth and engagement in the effort. Project orientation shall confirm the benefits and value of the project and shall answers the “what” and “how” question besides it shall motivate the team to move forward, allowing each team member to own their work and decisions to support the common goal. Moreover, when the team understands the direction, it informs their analysis and decision-making and establishes a framework for work behaviors and responsibilities.

In line with these objectives the Agriculture Production Department is organizing orientation and trainings of all stakeholders across sectors so that all stakeholders get a clear picture of the definition of the success of the project & structure of the project, allocation of responsibilities, implementation plan and implementation schedule.
